Kanne Vaa Kanmaniyae Vaa from the movie Kuzhandhai Yesu.USAID now requires sustainable accountability in P3 projects USAID now requires sustainable accountability in P3 projects Sustainability in Public-Private Partnerships (P3s) is a complex subject and a new study looks at sustainability practices currently implemented in USAID's P3s. The study, "Sustainability in Public-Private Partnerships," was conducted by the Sustainable Development Solutions Network (SDSN) and the Partnership for Sustained Development in Asia, (P4SDA), a partnership between the Rockefeller Foundation and USAID. The study, which includes over 20 interviews with major P3s, highlights that USAID now requires that all P3s have a systematic approach for measuring sustainability. This requirement is based on Congress' requirement to track the use of funds. The study also looked at policy and institutional support for P3s in developing countries. As the P4SDA comments, "Efforts to address the sustainability challenge in P3 projects have focused on the technical elements of project design, implementation and management. To our knowledge, none has addressed what is required of states in order to ensure sustainability of projects that receive funding through P3 mechanisms." The study notes that USAID has a number of methods for tracking where and how funds are spent. These include the memorandum of understanding, audit reports, and the inability of USAID to conduct independent reports.

“Inadequacies in institutional oversight over the use of P3 funds are typically blamed on poor coordination of the project budgeting process, poor engagement of the private sector and/or insufficient public sector capacity,” says the report. The study offers a few suggestions for improvement. These include developing structures, tools and incentives for monitoring and accountability, fostering technical capacity in developing countries, and advocating for public sector capacity building. In particular, says the report, “developing countries are calling for assistance with institutional capacity development, which include the process for measuring sustainability and helping public sectors to promote accountability and to manage corruption.” The Sustainable Development Solutions Network (SDSN) is a network of organizations and individuals working to create a more sustainable world. The Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) are the culmination of work started with the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), and build on the United Nations Rio Agenda 21 and the
